Apprenticeships are an integrated programme of learning which lead to young people getting and applying the skills, knowledge and understanding required by employers.

They aim to give young people the opportunity to:

- Achieve vocational, work-based qualifications.
- Learn on the job;.
- Build up knowledge and skills.
- Gain qualifications.

Apprenticeship programmes are an important route for new recruits to develop skills for employment. They are government-funded programmes of structured on-the-job training that enable employers to develop skilled staff.

They are a mixture of work-based training and education that combine to form an Apprenticeship framework. The frameworks are designed by sector skills councils or sector skills bodies.

For Your Peace of Mind

This apprenticeship programme has been developed by Children's Workforce Development Council and is delivered by Beneast Training.

Development Council

In short, the CWDC join up the way different agencies work, and bring consistency to the way children and young people are listened to and looked after. We are the voice of employers and we make sure their concerns, experiences and views directly influence workforce reform.

Our decisions and actions are informed by constant dialogue with employers, the workforce, children, young people and their families, as well as high quality research.
